MANIPULATIONS—PARTICULAR MALADIES.

Treatments are to be repeated as needed: acute cases every half to three hours until better; chronic cases, at first daily or oftener,—afterwards less often.

It is a mistake, sometimes made, to suppose that either pole may be applied indifferently to a diseased part, or that the direction of the current is of no consequence, or that the variety of currents here insisted on is unreal, or is a mere difference of strength. True, in the electro-muscular gymnastics, in cases of paralytic wasting, so fully elucidated by Duchenne, the individual muscles, being acted on by simple localized currents, primary or secondary, may respond to these, and as they proceed indifferently, from whatever direction; but in every other case, especially in allaying inflammation, and the correction of morbid tissue,—change resulting therefrom,—the precise rules as to poles, direction, and choice of currents, as hereinafter laid down, are of PRIME IMPORTANCE.

This statement must be made emphatic as to the discriminating and individualizing use of the combination battery. And just here it must be remarked, first, that every general rule herein given involves a principle of extended applicability; and, secondly, that individual cases, which are never identical, must always afford full scope for a wise and skilful variation of these general directions, in order to attain the full curative result.

The properties accredited to the several currents of this battery are to a good extent appreciable by
